The Personality Disorders Institute at the New York Presbyterian Hospital and Weill School of Medicine of Cornell University offers evaluation and treatment of patients with personality disorders across the spectrum of severity.

Primary responsibilities involve:

- Participate in an active research protocol in the Department of Psychiatry at CUMC for which the PDI has received private funding, Predictors of Change in Borderline Pathology Through Transference-Focused Psychotherapy (PI: John Clarkin, Ph.D.) This involves examining the nature of the predictors of different facets of change in BPD patients through TFP. This study brings together state-of-the-art psychotherapy, neurocognitive, neural circuitry, and genetic methodologies in the study of the effects of TFP on borderline pathology. Responsibilities include: a) In the data acquisition phase, acting as a senior supervisor in one of the study supervision groups in TFP technique that is training research therapists for this study; b) Helping to design and refine a measure of adherence and competence; c) Assisting to analyze and write up data on the influence of attachment status, mentalization and co-morbid conditions (NPD/BPD) as they operate as moderators of treatment outcome; d) Training research assistants in the administration of the Adult Attachment Interview (AAI); 5) Examining the impact of co-morbid NPD/BPD on the treatment process and outcome.
- Participate in developing and refining a manualized psychodynamic treatment for borderline patients: Transference-Focused Psychotherapy (TFP).

- Participate in investigating the efficacy and efficaciousness of TFP that involved assessing changes in attachment status, symptomatology and mentalization over the course of one year to 18 months of TFP.
- Mentor psychology interns, postdoctoral fellows and psychology graduate students and visiting research fellows in research and theoretical investigations of personality disorders
- Investigation of the impact of co-morbid borderline (BPD) and narcissistic personality disorder (NPD) on the treatment process and outcome in a randomized clinical trial of 90 patients treated with one year of TFP (Transference Focused Psychotherapy), DBT (Dialectical Behavior Therapy) and STP (Supportive Psychotherapy).
- Co-ordinate an international research group on co-occurring narcissistic and borderline personality disorders (NPD/BPD).
- Investigation of the relationship between attachment status and defensive processes
- Investigation of the impact of patient-therapist attachment on treatment course and outcome with borderline patients in one year of TFP.
- Investigation of changes in self and object representations of borderline patients on the Object Relations Inventory after one year of TFP, DBT and STP.
- Investigation of the relationship between attachment classification on the Adult Attachment Interview (AAI) and the developmental level of self and object representations assessed on the Object Relations Inventory (ORI).
- Investigation of the neural basis of attachment and reflective function in Borderline Personality Disorder
